Overview

The Chief Ladiga Trail is steeped in history and nature—traversing the historic Alabama communities of Anniston, Weaver, Jacksonville, and Piedmont as it weaves through the countryside, forests, and wetlands of Calhoun and Cleburne Counties. The paved pathway is a celebration of northeast Alabama's rich and beautiful natural landscapes, from pastoral views to mountainous terrain, and of the hundreds of species of plants and wildlife that call it home, including the red-tailed hawk and blue-gray gnatcatchers that dance with you as you move along the trail.

In Cleburne County, at the eastern end of the trail, some equestrian use is allowed. Water and resources are also limited east past Piedmont, as the route heads into other more rural communities surrounding the Talladega National For

About the Route

Leaving off from the trail's western endpoint in Anniston, the trail is relatively flat but will slowly gain around 700 feet in elevation throughout its whole route.

Heading northeast from Anniston, in 1 mile the trail reaches Weaver. When the trail reaches Jacksonville after another 3.2 miles, the trail passes through Jacksonville State University. With ample parking, water, and restrooms, this is another good place to refresh before heading farther east. Germania Springs Park in Jacksonville offers a playground, shelter, and shade, as well as restrooms and parking.

Just before entering Piedmont (9.6 miles after exiting Germania Springs Park), the trail crosses the Old Cherokee Indian Boundary, which marked the divide between the Creek and Cherokee Nations until the signing of the Treaty of Cusseta. Piedmont, a community with several trail access points, is the final stop for refreshments and restrooms.

Exiting Piedmont, about 13 miles remain until the trail's eastern end at the Alabama–Georgia state line. Note that the trail quickly becomes more rural and remote, and cell phone service is limited. Also, take note of areas where the trail surface is bumpier because of root damage.

This section of the trail through Talladega National Forest and the southern foothills of the Appalachian Mountains is awe-inspiring, offering vistas that give way to impressive rock formations revealed by the construction of the Seaboard Air Line Railroad a century ago. Along the way, trail users are treated to various views of Dugger Mountain, the second-highest peak in Alabama, as well as glimpses of Mount Cheaha, the highest peak in the state. The trail comes to its eastern endpoint in the town of Estom Hill, along the AL/GA
