Parkside Trail (Camden Greenways)

New Jersey

The Parkside Trail is one segment of the larger Camden Greenways network, a proposed system of trails currently under construction.

The Parkside Trail is one segment of the larger Camden Greenways network, a proposed system of trails currently under construction. When complete, the greenway will follow portions of the Delaware River, Cooper River, and Newtown Creek for a total of 9 miles. Although the Parkside Trail is less than a mile long, it forms an important link between two schools and two parks.

The paved pathway loosely follows the Cooper River through a wooded area in the Parkside neighborhood of Camden. On its west end, New Camden Park offers a playground and open play field. On its east end, the trail is anchored by the 71-acre Farnham Park, the largest park in the city.
