Indian Creek Greenway (AL)

Alabama

Overview The Indian Creek Greenway runs for 3.6 miles along the border of Madison and Huntsville, or Rocket City. The trail restaurants, and shops in the Providence community. Note that there is no designated trail parking available for this segment.

The primary segment of the greenway meanders south along its namesake creek for a leisurely 3 miles, through farmland and woods and over several bridge crossings. This scenic segment runs through the popular 72-acre Creekwood Park. Near the northern end of the park, a parking area at Harvestwood Court includes a large playground, an 18-hole disc golf course, covered picnic pavilions, restrooms, and a fenced-in dog park. Those interested in fishing may catch bass, catfish, and bluegill in the creek. Keep an eye out for turtles, great blue herons, and rabbits in the woods, as well as cows and horses grazing in the farmland portions.

From here, the trail heads another 1.4 miles to its southernmost endpoint at Old Madison Pike, where parking is available nearby.

Overview

The Indian Creek Greenway runs for 3.6 miles along the border of Madison and Huntsville, or Rocket City. The trail provides connections to residential developments, a high school, and Cummings Research Park, the second-largest research park in the United States, which is home to a massive rocket-building plant.

About the Route

The trail's 0.8-mile northern segment leaves off in the north just south of Providence Elementary School and travels south to US 72/AL 2/University Drive Northwest/ Lee Highway. The pathway runs through a heavily wooded area with spurs leading out to residential areas,
