Hugh Kaul Trail

Alabama

Near downtown Birmingham, the Hugh Kaul Trail stretches almost 2 miles along 1st Avenue South from 24th Street to 38th

Park and the Sloss Furnaces National Historic Landmark.

The Hugh Kaul Trail is included in Birmingham's Jones Valley Trail network, which is part of the Red Rock Trail System, a developing 750-mile network of multiuse trails in Jefferson County. The Red Rock Trail System connects important destinations throughout the region such as Red Mountain Park, which—at 1,500 acres—is one of the largest urban parks in the country.

Near downtown Birmingham, the Hugh Kaul Trail stretches almost 2 miles along 1st Avenue South from 24th Street to 38th Street. Following a former railroad corridor, the paved rail-trail is an off-road pathway that is often lined with trees. At the corner of 32nd Street South, there is a bike tool station and a bench for those enjoying the trail to repair their bike or to take a break.

From 38th Street, the route continues east as an on-road bike lane—running along 2nd Alley South and 3rd Avenue South before ending in the heart of Avondale.

At its western end on 24th Street, the rail-trail connects with the Rotary Trail, which was built on an old railroad cut through the middle of 1st Avenue South. Together, the two trails link two terrific city attractions, the Railroad
