Willow Creek Greenbelt Trail

Colorado

The Willow Creek Greenbelt Trail is a six mile, paved and soft-surface trail that runs along a creekbed in the suburban area which is home to the beginning of the short Cook Creek Trail. The trail continues to the southeast, ending in the small community of Lone Tree.

This peaceful trail offers residents and visitors a chance to experience some of the area's natural beauty - it's not uncommon to catch a glimpse of foxes and other wildlife along the route - while also providing a useful link in the area's extensive system of trails.

The Willow Creek Greenbelt Trail is a six mile, paved and soft-surface trail that runs along a creekbed in the suburban area around Centennial. The trail begins in the north outside the Holly Park Open Space, an open grassland area that offers appealing views of the Denver skyline. The park also hosts part of the Centennial Link Trail, which in turn offers a connection to the lengthy and popular High Line Canal Trail.

The Willow Creek Greenbelt Trail heads south along a quiet, tree-lined corridor that passes through residential neighborhoods and local parks. The trail heads under County Line Road, taking users right next to a large shopping complex and offering a connection to the C-470 Bikeway. Continuing under the highway, the trail passes through several open fields on its way to Cook Creek Park,
