Ygnacio Canal Trail

California

The Ygnacio Canal Trail begins at a junction with the Contra Costa Canal Trail. Most of the trail runs along the Ygnacio Canal, a

The largest of these is Arbolado Park, which has parking, restrooms, and drinking fountains. The trail then turns north, passing through a tunnel under Ygnacio Valley Rd. The trail ends along the base of Lime Ridge, where it rejoins the Contra Costa Canal Trail.

The western part of the Ygnacio Canal Trail goes through Heather Farm Park, passing a dog park and a lake. The Heather Farm Community Center and Clarke Memorial Swim center are nearby. At the end of the park there is a small gap where you must bike on the road or walk your bike on the sidewalk. Turn south on Kinross Dr., then go east along Ygnacio Valley Rd. At the entrance to the John Muir Medical Center, cross the road to continue on the bike path. The rest of the trail passes through residential areas. A number of parks are located along this section.
