amenities, A.Y. McDonald Park also offers a sizeable playground, picnic area, and restrooms, making this a great stop for those exploring the area via Dubuque's growing network of trails and bike routes.

The Dubuque Jaycees Trail runs for just over a mile from Pyatigorsk Park (named for a Russian sister city to Dubuque) up to the 8-acre A.Y. McDonald Park, a popular fishing and boat launch spot located where the Lake Peosta Channel flows back into the Mississippi River. The trail takes you behind a series of shops and businesses in a more industrial area of northern Dubuque thanks to the nearby rail yard and harbors, but the trail itself is nicely removed from the adjacent hustle and bustle, following the course of the channel. The southern end of the trail also connects with the Bee Branch Trail, which users can take to head in towards the northern end of Dubuque's charming downtown, as well as the Peosta Channel Trail, which provides access over the channel and onto Chaplain Schmitt Island and a variety of popular destinations and park areas. In addition to its aquatic
