North-South Connector Trail

Michigan

The aptly-named North-South Connector Trail provides a paved trail connection between the communities of Gibraltar and plot on the outskirts of town before joining the side of W Jefferson Avenue. On your right, you'll pass by the entrance to the future site of the Detroit River International Wildlife Refuge Visitor Center, which is under construction as of fall 2019. Once built, the site will offer a number of nature trails and a chance to learn about the history of the area and the thriving ecosystem along the river. The trail continues north along the road and enters into Elizabeth Park in Trenton, a lovely recreation site located on a small island in the river - the park offers great spots for fishing and picnicking, and hosts seasonal events such as ice skating in the winter and a jazz series in the summer. The trail hugs the bank of a river outlet on the outskirts of the park, coming to an end at the south end of downtown Trenton.

The aptly-named North-South Connector Trail provides a paved trail connection between the communities of Gibraltar and Trenton, in the area south of Detroit known as the Downriver. Part of a developing trail network called the Downriver Linked Greenways, the North-South Connector Trail allows cyclists and pedestrians to easily commute between the two cities, while providing access to a number of riverside recreation sites along the way, making it a fantastic way to explore the area.

Starting in the south, the trail begins in the heart of the small city of Gibraltar - concrete sidewalks lead from the asphalt trail to the Battle of Brownstown Memorial outside of town, at the junction of the East-West Connector Trail and the Lake Erie Metropark Trail. Heading north along the trail, you pass through a wooded
