The Lyle Hatfield Path, named in honor of one of Springfield's former city council presidents, is a short little hidden gem, providing a paved, multi-use pathway along a wooded corridor next to the McKenzie River. The trail is situated behind a massive hospital complex, inviting nearby residents to enjoy some preventative medicine by taking a nice stroll or jog along the trail. The surface is well-maintained, with ample lighting and benches along the way - what the path lacks in length it makes up for in quality, and by providing plenty of pretty views of the nearby river.

Past the hospital, the paved section of trail comes to an end, but trail users can continue their journey along a grass walking and jogging trail to get in some extra mileage and exercise.
