The Randy Pape Beltline Path runs along the roadway of the same name, stretching over two miles from Roosevelt Boulevard in the south to Highway 99 in the north. The asphalt trail is smooth and well-kept, providing both an excellent commuter pathway and a great option for nearby residents to get in a jog or quick ride. Streetlamps along the southern half of the route provide ample lighting at night, with the trail progressing over rolling hills along the western side of the busy road.

Connections are available to several other trails in the Eugene area network, including the Jessen Path and the Roosevelt Boulevard Path, making the trail into an integral part of the off-road transportation system in the northwest part of the city.
