Dogwood Springs Walking Trail

Arkansas

The Dogwood Springs Walking Trail meanders through the city of Siloam Springs in west Arkansas, near the Oklahoma border. The

A short distance away on North Dogwood Street is the longest trail segment. The trail circles around the John Brown University campus through the riparian woodland, and then continues south along the edge of Oak Hills Cemetery and Siloam Springs Middle School campus, ending at Carl Street in a residential area.

While the sidewalk connections might be a challenge to navigate, keep a look-out for the Dogwood Springs lamp-post banners to help orient you. Also see the trail map for the full route.

The Dogwood Springs Walking Trail meanders through the city of Siloam Springs in west Arkansas, near the Oklahoma border. The trail consists of 8-foot wide asphalt sections connected by sidewalk. The east segment features a loop around the baseball park, emerging on the west corner of the park and following Sager Creek down to Washington Street. The central segment runs through Bob Henry Park, also along the creek and downstream of the dammed part of the river (you can get the best views of the reservoir at City Park, across University Road from Bob Henry Park). This segment of the trail is scenic, sticking close to the creek while allowing users to hop between a range of recreational facilities including tennis courts, a skate park, a dog park, a playground and picnic tables.
