I-696 Trail

Michigan

Located atop Interstate 696 as it cuts through the Detroit suburbs of Oak Park and Southfield are the three parks. Back in the 1980s, the visitors to move between them easily and creating an extended recreation experience. It also provides access to the Lincoln Woods Nature Preserve. The trail is wide and flat, stroller and wheelchair friendly.

Located atop Interstate 696 as it cuts through the Detroit suburbs of Oak Park and Southfield are the three parks. Back in the 1980s, the Orthodox Jewish community opposed the construction of this segment of freeway, as it would have and cut them off from reaching their synagogues on foot. The compromise reached was to provide safe pedestrian crossings in the form of these upper deck parks. In addition to safe crossing, the parks provide plenty of room for recreation.

The three parks are Freeway Park, which features a plaza and spiral walking paths; the 7.2 acre Charlotte Rothstein Park, named for the mayor who helped negotiate for the crossings in the first place; and Victoria Park, which has play areas that young ones can enjoy. A concrete trail parallels I-696 and threads through the parks, enabling
