Raymond Battlefield Walking Trail

Mississippi

While many visitors flock every year to tour the Vicksburg battlefield site, not as many are aware of the preserved hidden gem for both military history buffs and those looking for a quiet nature walk.

While many visitors flock every year to tour the Vicksburg battlefield site, not as many are aware of the preserved hidden gem that is the Raymond Military Park, located near Jackson just over twenty miles to the east of Vicksburg. The site commemorates the Battle of Raymond, a key clash during General Grant's Vicksburg campaign, and features a scenic interpretive trail that allows visitors to learn more about the area's history along its shaded, paved path.

The western part of the loop trail lies along the former route of the narrow gauge Little J spur of what became part of the Illinois Central Railroad, a line which played an important role in the area's history during and beyond the Civil War. A series of signage along the trail provides ample information for visitors, making this an ideal stop
