The Wiggins Multi-Use Path is a concrete pathway that runs between parks and recreation sites within the community of Wiggins, Mississippi. The path winds its way from the Flint Creek Water Park in the north, through Reynolds Field, and down to the playground and facilities at Blaylock Park, nestled right in the middle of town.

While in town, the pathway requires several road crossings, as it functions mostly as a wider sidewalk along 3rd Street, but when it reaches the northern end of town it does offer more of a scenic remove. Regardless, the Wiggins Multi-Use Path provides a nice option for local residents to navigate the area off-road, linking neighborhoods to parks in this small community.
