South Portland Greenbelt Walkway

Maine

Meandering through South Portland, the Greenbelt Walkway connects the neighborhoods south of the Fore River. The paved, continues northeast to the historic Bug Light Park, where Liberty Ships were built during World War II. Cushing's Point Museum, run by South Portland Historical Society, is near the south side of the park.

The trail ends by the Portland Breakwater Lighthouse at the northern tip of Bug Light Park. The park is a popular spot for picnicking, boating, kite flying, or saltwater fishing. Enjoy the stunning views of the Portland Harbor and the city's skyline.

The Greenbelt Walkway is the northern-most section of the Eastern Trail, which connects the historic towns along Maine's southern coast from the woods near Kennebunk to South Portland's harbor lighthouse. The Eastern Trail itself is included in the East Coast Greenway, a 3000-mile-long trail project running between Maine and Key West, Florida.

Meandering through South Portland, the Greenbelt Walkway connects the neighborhoods south of the Fore River. The paved, multiuse trail offers three distinct vistas of the Portland waterfront and wildlife-watching opportunities as it runs through fields, wetlands, marshes, and woods. The 5.6-mile trail provides an off-road connection between local residences, schools, businesses, restaurants, parks, museums, community services, and a variety of cultural and recreational attractions.

From its southwest endpoint by the Wainwright Athletic Complex near the Scarborough town line, the trail heads northeast through woods and fields. As the trail runs along Barberry Creek and towards the Fore River, it's surroundings transition to a mix of residential and commercial areas. Curving to parallel the river, the trail
