Spring Creek Greenway Trail

Illinois

The Spring Creek Greenway Trail, separated into distinct eastern and western portions of the trail, spans 8.45 miles throughout two

The trail here takes a long loop around the outside of the park and then follows the namesake Spring Creek as it heads northeast towards Bruce Road.

The eastern end of the trail is situated within Messenger Marsh Dog Park, a 650-acre park, also part of the large Will County Preservation District. This section of the preserve is home to over 1100 bird species and is not only a dog park, but also has space for picnicking, shoreline fishing and even geocaching.

While these two sections of the Spring Creek Greenway Trail don't connect, they each provide around 4 miles of crushed limestone trail situated in pristine natural environments, the perfect escape from the suburban expanse of Northern Illinois, and are worth a visit.

The Spring Creek Greenway Trail, separated into distinct eastern and western portions of the trail, spans 8.45 miles throughout two distinct sections of preserved and protected lands.

At its western end, the trail loops through the Hadley Valley, a 854 acre preserve home to forests, savannas and wetlands. The preserve is not only home to plants like the tall swamp marigold, the wahoo and the great angelica and hundreds of species of invertebrates, fish, mammals and amphibians, but is also a renowned and award-winning example of conservation. The preserve has undergone prescribed burnings, invasive species control and native species reestablishment and more that has won the preserve the 2019 Excellence in Ecological Restoration award from Chicago Wilderness and more.
