Switzerland Trail

Colorado

The Switzerland Trail in the peaks west of Boulder was named for the spectacular mountain scenery along this remote and former

The elevation on the trail gently fluctuates between around 7,700ft and 8,700ft. The mountain itself has peaks that rise to 9,000ft.

The relative level grade owes its existence to an old narrow-gauge rail line around the turn of the 20th century. The line was built to accommodate mining operations in Colorado's front range, and the trail route itself is listed on the National Register of Historic Places as the Denver, Boulder and Western Railway Historic District.

The Switzerland Trail in the peaks west of Boulder was named for the spectacular mountain scenery along this remote and former railroad route. The trail is popular with mountain bikers, ATVs and 4X4s, so whatever your mode of travel, be considerate of other trail users.

Begin your adventure at either end. In the south, the trail starts below the summit of Sugarloaf Mountain off the road of the same name. From here it winds along a relatively level grade, gradually descending to Fourmile Canyon Drive (US 118), along Fourmile Creek. Here it crosses the road and begins a gradual ascent back up the mountain on its way toward Gold Hill. The Switzerland Trail's northern end is at Sawmill Road (County 95) just above Lefthand Canyon Drive.
