Switzerland Trail

Colorado

The Switzerland Trail in the peaks west of Boulder was named for the spectacular mountain scenery along this remote and former above Lefthand Canyon Drive.

The elevation on the trail gently fluctuates between around 7,700ft and 8,700ft. The mountain itself has peaks that rise to 9,000ft.

Trail History

The relative level grade of the trail owes its existence to an old narrow-gauge rail line around the turn of the 20th century. The line was built to accommodate mining operations in Colorado's front range, and the trail route itself is listed on the National Register of Historic Places as the Denver, Boulder, and Western Railway Historic District.

The Switzerland Trail in the peaks west of Boulder was named for the spectacular mountain scenery along this remote and former railroad route. The trail is popular with mountain bikers, ATVs, and 4X4s, and may not be considered rideable for hybrid bikes.

About the Route

Leaving off from the south end of the trail, the route leaves from below the summit of Sugarloaf Mountain off the road of the same name. From here it winds along a relatively level grade, gradually descending to Fourmile Canyon Drive (US 118), along Fourmile Creek. Here it crosses the road and begins a gradual ascent back up the mountain on its way toward Gold Hill. The Switzerland Trail's northern end is at Sawmill Road (County 95) just
