Suwannee River Greenway at Branford

Florida

Suwannee River Greenway includes an east-west route between the Suwannee and Ichetucknee rivers, as well as a short north-south

Suwannee River Greenway includes an east-west route between the Suwannee and Ichetucknee rivers, as well as a short north-south section that starts mid-way between the two rivers and heads to the Santa Fe River. The entire trail is paved and partially follows a former CSX Railroad corridor. Along the way, numerous benches and small covered pavilions beneath a dense tree canopy provide plenty of shady rest stops.

Two trailheads—at Ivey Memorial Park and in Branford—lie in a bend along the western half of the trail. Ivey has the only public restroom and water fountain, so you may want to start your trip here. Consider a visit to Branford's restaurants, convenience stores and gas stations before hitting the trail.

North of town, the trail parallels US Highway 129 for about 2.5 miles before it ends. If you continue west just over 1 mile along lightly traveled CR 248, you'll reach Little River Springs State Park. Cool off with a dip in the springs at this slice of old Florida on the Suwannee.

Heading back toward Branford along the trail, you'll pass the trailheads before reaching a gopher turtle preserve at the trail midpoint. Be on the lookout for a gopher turtle or two, as well as other small trail critters.

The path around the south side of Branford is built on the old rail bed and is smooth and solid. The section parallel to US27, from the east side of Branford to the Ichetucknee River is potholed and uneven.

By the time you reach trail's end, you may be ready for a relaxing tube ride down the meandering Ichetucknee. Also worth a visit is Ichetucknee Springs State Park, a short drive away. On the other side of the Ichetucknee you pick up the Ichetucknee to O'Leno Trail.

This is a pet-friendly trail but they must be kept leashed and have current vaccination records for inspection.
