As well as providing excellent recreational space, the trail is a viable and valued transportation corridor with a variety of access points. Williams Middle School students use the trail as a route to school, while high school football fans park a few blocks away and walk to games via the trail. Colquitt Regional Medical Center patients and staff also use the trail.

In South Georgia, Moultrie is a small city with big Southern pride. Billing itself as the "City of Southern Living," Moultrie boasts a thriving agricultural industry, historical homes, commercial buildings and a state-of-the-art athletic center. Its centerpiece is this 7.2-mile rail-trail, as varied as the city it traverses. In a matter of miles, the Tom "Babe" White Linear Park (a.k.a. the Moultrie Trail) will whisk you from woodlands to streetscapes, or from a quiet cemetery to a busy restaurant.

Following an old CSX rail bed, the trail leads from downtown Moultrie past a recreation complex and a middle school, through a residential area, and past a country club. You'll cross US Highway 319 before emerging at Moultrie Municipal Airport.
