Connections

It is possible link the east and west segments of this trail—in a long, roundabout way—by continuing on the Illinois Prairie Path where it meets the Great Western Trail (just west of Prince Crossing Road). Take the Illinois Prairie Path north and west to Elgin, where it meets the Fox River Trail. Cross the river and take the Fox River Trail south and west to the River Bend Trail (a.k.a. Silver Glen Trail), which meets up with the Randall Road Bike Path. Head south to LeRoy Oakes County Forest Preserve, where it joins the western segment of the Great Western Trail.

Trail History

The Chicago Great Western Railway (later Chicago and North Western) was called the Corn Belt Route because it linked Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha and Kansas City.

Overview

The eastern segment of the Great Western Trail in Illinois follows almost 13 miles of an abandoned railway corridor through DuPage County, between Villa Park and West Chicago.

About the Route

The crushed limestone trail provides access for cyclists, walkers, joggers, equestrians and cross-country skiers.

From its western end on Sassafras Drive in West Chicago, the primarily wooded rail-trail runs east to its eastern end on S Villa Avenue in Villa Park.
