Pecatonica Prairie Trail

Illinois

The Pecatonica Prairie Trail, formerly known as the Pecatonica Prairie Path, is a 14.3-mile rail-trail extending from the western

In Stephenson County, the trail remains undeveloped with a grassy surface. Trail users may continue on the corridor west to the edge of Freeport, but mountain bikes and hiking boots are recommended. It may prove to be difficult to navigate even for rough-terrain bikes. This 13.5-mile section is targeted for improvement in the future; eventually, it will connect directly to the Jane Addams Trail in downtown Freeport.

The Pecatonica Prairie Trail, formerly known as the Pecatonica Prairie Path, is a 14.3-mile rail-trail extending from the western edge of Rockford to N. Farwell Bridge Road west of Pecatonica. The crushed limestone-surfaced route is predominately rural, passing through a landscape of farmland, wetlands, meadows and woods. The trail is paved where it passes through the hearts of the small villages of Winnebago and Pecatonica.

The trail follows the old right-of-way of the Chicago and North Western Railway, now owned by Commonwealth Edison and used for electricity transmission. It is also the longest northern component of the Grand Illinois Trail, which is one day planned to connect the Mississippi River with Lake Michigan.
