You can make connections all over the countryside from the Madison County Transit (MCT) Ronald J. Foster Heritage Trail. The paved path travels 12.2 miles between the villages of Glen Carbon and Marine and hooks into a 130-mile network of interconnected trails that MCT has been creating since 1993.

The trail is named for a former mayor of Glen Carbon, Illinois; the city originally built the trail on the disused corridor of the Illinois Central Railroad in 1991. Illinois Central was one of three railroads that passed through the coal-rich community from nearby St. Louis, Missouri. In 2012 the village transferred trail ownership to Madison County Transit, which upgraded and extended it.

Today, the trail retains historical markers (that tell about Glen Carbon's coal-mining history) and connects with two other trails, the MCT Nickel Plate Trail (more than 25 miles long) and the MCT Goshen Trail (which spans about 9 miles). These make off-road connections to other trails in the network: the MCT Nature, Quercus Grove, Schoolhouse, and Watershed Trails.

Starting in Glen Carbon at the junction with the MCT Nickel Plate Trail near Citizen Park, you'll enter a wooded area along Judys Branch where the Illinois Central hauled coal from the mines. The area was settled as Goshen in 1801, but the coal boom from the late 1800s to 1930s prompted the name change.

Passing through woods and crossing suburban streets on the way out of town, you'll enter a 150-foot tunnel beneath Troy Road at 2.5 miles. Skirting the Greenspace East Park (bicycling is prohibited in the park), you'll cross the junction with MCT Goshen Trail and reach a trailhead parking lot less than a mile from the tunnel. Just past the trail crossing, there's another tunnel (Old Troy Road) and soon you're out into open farmland.

When there's a break in the trees that border the trail, you'll see that cropland is predominant. Keep your eyes open, however, for areas where biologists are attempting to reestablish grasses and other natural prairie vegetation.

At 4.8 miles past the Goshen Trail junction, you'll find the 340-foot Silver Creek trestle, 1 of 10 spans that MCT rehabilitated when it took over the trail.

In 4 miles, you arrive in Marine. Legend has it that sailors were among the first settlers in the 1800s, and the waving prairie grasses reminded them of the open seas, hence the name. Despite its "marine" history, the village prohibits swimming and wading in the lake at Marine Heritage Park that marks the end of the trail.
