Erie Lackawanna Trail

Indiana

Overview The Erie Lackawanna Trail runs for 17.6 miles and connects Crown Point and Hammond, two former rail junctions

Overview

The Erie Lackawanna Trail runs for 17.6 miles and connects Crown Point and Hammond, two former rail junctions whose early fortunes were tied to the tracks carrying people and goods to and from Chicago. Despite traveling through the densely populated Chicago metropolitan area, the trail is bordered by green space and traverses wetlands and parks along the way.

About the Route

The northern endpoint of the trail is located nearly in Illinois, in the town of Calumet, Indiana, along a wooded corridor that takes trail users south past the Hammond Civic Center. After the trail crosses under a US 94, the route bends slightly west and then directly east along the Little Calumet River Levee Trail and then south again back on the main rail corridor.

The old rail corridor alternates between a shaded, wooded corridor and open grassy fields under full sun. In Griffith, trail users can find Griffith Historical Park. Here, the circa 1911 Grand Trunk Western Railroad depot and the 1924 brick tower that oversaw operations at the Broad Street crossing can be found. Also in Griffith, the trail passes the Oak Prairie Savannah, a 965-acre native grassland.

Just before crossing Burr Street, the trail is mowed 10 feet to the side of either trail, that ensures that wildlife stays far out from the trail.

At the southern end of the trail in Crown Point, the trail is less than a mile from the city's most famous landmark, the jail where 1930s bank robber John Dillinger escaped before he was killed in Chicago. Here the trail meets its southern endpoint at W Summit St.

Connections

At the trail's northern endpoint, the trail connects to the Monon Trail \(Lake County\).

In Hammond, the trail connects with the Little Calumet River Levee Trail.

The Erie Lackawanna Trail is part of the Great American Rail Trail, a 3,700-mile route from Washington to Washington D.C.
