Chief Standing Bear Trail

Nebraska

The Chief Standing Bear Trail spans 22.9 miles from the southeast Nebraska town of Beatrice to the Nebraska/Kansas state line. It's restrooms, and water fountains. At each of the four trailheads, there are bicycle repair stations available for convenient use.

On the trail's north end in Beatrice, it connects to the Homestead Trail, which travels 40 miles north to Lincoln. The southern end of the Chief Standing Bear Trail connects to another rail-trail over the border; the Blue River Rail Trail heads south along the same former railroad corridor for nearly 12 miles to Marysville, Kansas.

The Chief Standing Bear Trail spans 22.9 miles from the southeast Nebraska town of Beatrice to the Nebraska/Kansas state line. It's named after a Ponca chief and the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska owns the trail. The Homestead Conservation and Trail Association maintains the route.

The crushed-stone pathway follows the Blue River through a mix of rolling farmland, native prairie grasses and lush tree-canopied sections, where you might see deer, hawks, raccoons, wild turkeys and other animals. Trailheads in Beatrice, Holmesville, Blue Springs and Barneston offer signage on the local wildlife, pioneers and the Ponca Tribe.

The north end of the trail is marked by the Gage County Foundation Depot, with paved parking, a trail shelter,
