Lowell Canal System Trails

Massachusetts

Lowell's Canal System Trails are part of Lowell National Historical Park in Lowell, Massachusetts. The park preserves some of boat cruise. Whichever your mode of transport, the riverwalk and canalway routes stop by many historical sites and museums. Throughout the year many cultural events will keep you entertained.

Lowell's Canal System Trails are part of Lowell National Historical Park in Lowell, Massachusetts. The park preserves some of America's industrial past: its 19th-century textile mills formed the first large-scale planned industrial city in America. According to the National Park Service, Lowell's mills helped advance "a new era of technical innovation in textile manufacturing, gave rise to the modern corporation, and developed one of America's earliest urban working classes."

The system of canals once rivalled that of Venice, and today the city is awash in historical and cultural attractions. In the park, which is part of downtown Lowell, you can take a guided or self-guided walking tour along the old trolley line or ride on replica trolleys, some of which parallel the walking paths. You can also take a canal
