Columbia Greenway Rail Trail

Massachusetts

Overview The Columbia Greenway Rail Trail offers just over 3 miles of paved, tree-lined pathway through Westfield in southwestern

Most of the trail is elevated, following the former New York/New Haven/Hartford Railroad. The section between the Westfield River and Main Street is completely elevated as it passes through downtown Westfield, offering unique views of the city and the surrounding landscape. It is one of the only elevated urban rail-trails in the United States. The route also has nine pedestrian bridges.

Connections

From its southern end, the trail connects seamlessly to the Southwick Rail Trail, which continues nearly 7 miles to the Massachusetts–Connecticut state line.

The Columbia Greenway Rail Trail is part of the larger New Haven & Northampton Canal Greenway, a trail network that will, when complete, span over 80 miles between New Haven, CT and Northampton, MA.
