Susquehannock Trail System

Pennsylvania

Located in scenic Potter and Clinton Counties, the Susquehannock Hiking Trail is an 85-mile amalgamation of old Civilian

Somewhat coincidentally, the Hammersley is also the most rail-intensive portion of the system. Timber was cut here between 1906 and 1910. Several logging camps and a small town were once located near where Nelson Branch and Hammersley Fork merge. Also, this site is just north of the Forrest H. Dutlinger Natural Area, a 1,500-acre preserve that includes a 158-acre stand of old growth timber (primarily hemlocks).

Located in scenic Potter and Clinton Counties, the Susquehannock Hiking Trail is an 85-mile amalgamation of old Civilian Conservation Corps fire trails, logging roads and railroad grades through the Susquehannock State Forest. Isolated and pristine, the Susquehannock Trail System provides hikers and backpackers with a well marked (orange blaze), rugged trail with some steep grades on single track tread in an isolated backcountry setting. The Hammersley Wild Area is especially unspoiled, offering the longest section of roadless trail in the Susquehannock loop. Please take note: The Susquehannock Trail System accepts foot-traffic only. Work on the trail began in the early 1960s under the leadership of the local innkeeper and Susquehannock Trail President, Will Ahn.
