Deep River State Trail

North Carolina

The Deep River State Trail runs in two distinct sections, one traveling through Franklinville, between the Deep River & Faith

The Deep River State Trail follows the abandoned rail bed of the Atlantic and Yadkin Railroad, which began operations in 1897 and shut down in 1980.

The Deep River State Trail runs in two distinct sections, one traveling through Franklinville, between the Deep River & Faith Rock while another 1.5 miles of rail trail runs through Ramseur. The trail's total length is 3.5 miles.

About the Route

Faith Rock, which anchors the trail's western end, is Randolph County's most prominent Revolutionary War site. From here, the trail runs east alongside Deep River and through Franklinville. The trail then crosses Sandy Creek and runs up alongside US Highway 64 where the trail continues along as the river bends before reaching its eastern end at Brooklyn Ave.
