Ron's River Trail

Montana

Ron's River Trail follows both the north and south sides of the Clark Fork River through city parks downtown and near the university ground-breaking in long-distance electrification. Though extant tracks on the north side of the river still carry freight, passenger service to Missoula ended in the 1970s.

On the trail's east end, you can connect to the Kim Williams Trail. About 2 blocks west of McCormick Park, you can also pick up two other trails: the Milwaukee Trail, which heads another 1.8 miles farther west, and the Bitterroot Trail, which goes south more than 50 miles all the way to Hamilton.

Ron's River Trail follows both the north and south sides of the Clark Fork River through city parks downtown and near the university campus. The trail is part of a larger city-wide system that links the east side of the valley at the University of Montana to west-side neighborhoods. The pathway provides beautiful river views and easy, non-motorized access to the campus, neighborhoods, parks, shopping, restaurants, and a host of other attractions in Missoula.

Ron's River Trail follows the former right-of-way along the old Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, and Pacific railroad, commonly known as the Milwaukee Road. The portions in Montana were built between 1906 and 1909, serving as both a freight and passenger line. With more than 656 miles of electrified track, the Milwaukee Road was
