Poudre River Trail

Colorado

The Poudre River Trail tracks a 35.5-mile, scenic course along Cache la Poudre River between Fort Collins and Greeley. The including the Lions Open Space and Springer Natural Area. For more detailed information on this trail section, see Poudre Trail \(Fort Collins\).

The paved Poudre River Trail in Greeley is popular with hikers, runners, cyclists, and inline skaters. The path is wide with gentle grades, passing through a forested corridor and among scenic open spaces, where wildflowers bloom in spring and summer. Passing through several parks and natural areas, the trail offers plenty of recreational opportunities, including wildlife watching, fishing, and picnicking. Trail users will also find plenty of historical sites and educational sites to visit along our trail.

Connections

At the Riverbend Ponds Natural Area in Fort Collins, trail users can continue along the Spring Creek Trail \(CO\).

At N 59th Ave, the Poudre River Trail connects to the Sheep Draw Trail.

The Poudre River Trail tracks a 35.5-mile, scenic course along Cache la Poudre River between Fort Collins and Greeley. The original Poudre River Trail was built between the towns of Windsor and Greeley but has since been combined with Fort Collins's Poudre Trail to form a regional Poudre River Trail network. The Greeley and Fort Collins sections of the trail are separated but the gaps between these two trails are slowly closing, including a section of trail in the Arapahoe Bend Natural Area, which is currently disconnected from the longer trail sections

About the Route
