Martin Luther King Equality Trail

Michigan

The Martin Luther King Equality Trail, formerly called the Jackson Intercity Trail, follows the old rail bed of what was once the Park Road and with SW Avenue—a smooth, wide, concrete path splits off from the main route to head northwest. This pathway cuts through woods and fields, crosses Kibby Road and continues north until it reaches Cascade Falls Park. Cascade Falls Park has numerous activities, amenities, and attractions, including a hillside waterfall built in 1932.

Alternatively, take another smooth, wide, concrete path from New Leaf Park (located by the intersection of Park Road and 4th Street where the trail crosses 4th Street). The pathway heads south from the park, paralleling 4th Street until it reaches Ella Sharp Park (2800 4th St). Enjoy this additional 2.5-mile route as the trail heads into the park, winding through the meadows and trees.

The Martin Luther King Equality Trail, formerly called the Jackson Intercity Trail, follows the old rail bed of what was once the Michigan Central Railroad for 4.5 miles north through the southwest neighborhoods of Jackson to its downtown.

The trail provides a pleasant, non-motorized way for area residents to commute to shops and work, as well as for recreation. Across the river from the trail's northern end, continue your adventure on the Grand River Arts Walk. For those wanting to venture farther afield, the southern end of trail connects to the Falling Waters Trail at Weatherwax Drive, which carries on southwest 10.5 miles to the town of Concord.
