Meadow River Rail Trail

West Virginia

Meadow River Rail Trail

West Virginia

The Meadow River Rail Trail is a developing rail-trail that meanders along its scenic namesake river in West Virginia's

Trailhead. The trestle bridge is one of two crossing over the Meadow River along the route. The rail-trail meanders south along the eastern bank of the river to its southern end at the Meadow River Bridge. Currently, the trail is an out-and-back as the southern end of the trail dead ends in the woods at the bridge and the Burdette Creek.

It's 2.9 miles from the Nallen Trailhead to the Russellville Trailhead and 6.29 miles from the Russellville Trailhead to the Meadow River Bridge.

When complete, the rail-trail will be 23.1 miles and may one day connect to the Gauley River National Recreation Area at its northern end.

The Meadow River Rail Trail is a developing rail-trail that meanders along its scenic namesake river in West Virginia's Fayette and Greenbrier counties. The rail-trail follows a former CSX spur line built in 1907 that once serviced a lumber company.

Running 9.19-miles between Nallen and Rainelle, the first phase opened on October 13, 2023. The compacted stone unpaved trail will be suitable for walking, mountain biking, fishing, cross-country skiing, and horseback riding.

From the Nallen Trailhead at its northern end, the rail-trail runs along the western border of Fayette County. Continuing south, it crosses Russellville Bridge into Greenbrier County and passes the Russellville
