Overview

The Manayunk Bridge Trail, which opened in 2015, crosses the Schuylkill River, Interstate 76, and active train tracks, along a historic bridge that was opened to public use after several decades of disuse. In the process, the short but important trail linked two other popular trails in neighboring Montgomery and Philadelphia counties.

About the Route

Open for non-motorized use, the Manayunk Bridge Trail offers sweeping views of the Schuylkill River, Schuylkill Canal, and downtown Manayunk. On the Montgomery County side, smile and wave at passing cars on I-76 below. At the trail's southern end in Bala Cynwyd trail users can seamlessly pick up the Cynwyd Heritage Trail.

In Manayunk, the trail ends at the intersection of Dupont Street and High Street, where the Schuylkill River Trail is located just nearby.

Connections

The northern end of the Manayunk Bridge Trail is located just off the impressive Schuylkill River Trail.

At the southern end of the trail, the trail connects to the Cynwyd Heritage Trail.

The Manayunk Bridge Trail is part of the Circuit Trails, a developing 800-mile urban network of trails in Greater Philadelphia.

Trail History

Opened in 1918, the Manayunk Bridge was built by the Pennsylvania Railroad as part of their Schuylkill Branch, which carried passengers and freight from Philadelphia to a point near Delano (northeast of Pottsville). The line north of Manayunk was closed by Conrail—the successor to the Pennsylvania Railroad—in 1976. Subsequently, the regional transportation agency SEPTA took over the remaining line between Philadelphia and Manayunk, including the bridge, using it for service on its Cynwyd Line. Passenger rail was truncated from Manayunk's Ivy Ridge Station to Cynwyd in 1986, after which point the Manayunk Bridge ceased to be used.
