Chamblee Rail Trail

Georgia

The Chamblee Rail Trail, also known as the Keswick Park Extension Trail, is situated in Chamblee, a community northeast of Atlanta.

At the south end of the park, the trail forks with a short branch heading west to Jefferson Circle North. The main route heads south from the park and passes under busy Peachtree Boulevard.

After briefly paralleling Clairmont Road, there is another split in the trail. A short spur of the trail continues south to Peachtree Road, while the main route curves east under Clairmont Road.

As the trail crosses Chamblee Tucker Road, the Chamblee MARTA train station is just two blocks south of the trail on New Peachtree Road. Continuing east through downtown Chamblee, the trail comes to its southwest end on Pierce Drive.

Long-term plans include linking the pathway into the rapidly-developing regional trail network.

The Chamblee Rail Trail, also known as the Keswick Park Extension Trail, is situated in Chamblee, a community northeast of Atlanta. Heading through downtown as it follows the abandoned Roswell Junction Railroad line, the paved pathway provides important community connections. Natural landscaping and trees keep the route pleasant, while many businesses and restaurants are just steps away. Almost 2 miles long, the rail-trail is 12ft wide and paved.

At its northern end, sits the city's largest park, Keswick Park. The park has a variety of sports fields and courts, an event lawn, a playground, a dog park, picnic shelters and tables, restrooms, drinking fountains, benches, pet waste stations, and parking.
