Gerry Connolly Cross County Trail

Virginia

The Gerry Connolly Cross County Trail is a multi-use trail that follows along the various stream valleys in Fairfax County, Virginia

The Gerry Connolly Cross County Trail is a multi-use trail that follows along the various stream valleys in Fairfax County, Virginia for 41.4 miles. It is officially named the Gerry Connolly Cross County Trail in recognition of Congressman Connolly's strong support for open space and parkland during his tenure on the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors, although most people just refer to it as the Cross County Trail.

Some sections are wheelchair/mobility scooter accessible, while others feature rougher terrain that are not suited to even road bikes. Some sections are suitable for horseback riding, and the entire length of the Cross County Trail is open to foot traffic and bikes.

NOTE: Periodic flooding in some areas can wash out sections of the trail in extreme events at worst. At best, spring rains can make sections muddy. Use caution and check the local website (link to the right) for trail alerts.

About the Route

The trail winds through northern Virginia's hardwood forests, much of it bottomland—as it follows stream courses that braid their way throughout the county. Some of the trail passes through the forest and meadows of county parks, while other sections pass through county-owned land that borders wooded subdivisions. In addition, trail users will find nearby shopping and business districts.

The northern terminus is located at legendary Great Falls Park along the Potomac River. The trail heads southwest from here along Difficult Run River, with a slight gap in the trail along Leesburg Pike. The trail then heads south through Tamarack Park and Little Difficult Run Stream Park. In Oakton, the trail turns east and begins to follow Accotink Creek.

Here, the trail passes through Mantua Park and the Eakin Community Park. In Annandale, the trail heads due south once again, still following the Accotink Creek as it passes through Mill Creek Park and Americana Park and finally skirts around Lake Accotink in Lake Accotink Park.

The southernmost section of the trail first follows Pohick Creek and then leaves off from the streambed altogether to pass through suburban neighborhoods. This section also passes Laurel Hill, the former site of the Lorton Prison, now an expansive county park with lots to offer.

Heading south, the trail extends to the Occoquan River, where it reaches its southern terminus at the Occoquan Regional Park.

Trail users will see lots of wildlife, such as deer, foxes,
