The Millennium Trail spans just over 30 miles in two disconnected segments. The trail goes through forest, farmland, and the suburban neighborhoods of Lake County with a range of surfaces, including crushed stone, asphalt, and concrete. Though largely well marked with Millennium Trail signs, the route is intertwined with other trails throughout, so pay close attention to the signage.

About the Route

The northern section of the Millennium Trail leaves off from Lindenhurst's Forest View Park. From there, the trail heads south, traveling through the gently rolling hills of McDonald Woods Forest Preserve and into Bonner Heritage Farm, first settled by Scottish immigrants in 1848. The farm is especially popular with children, providing educational programming with barnyard animals, field crops, and gardens. The route continues through Fourth Lake Forest Preserve, with beautiful views of lakes, ponds, and wetlands.

South of Lake County Road 31/A20, the trail travels roughly east-west through the Rollins Savana Forest Preserve, where trail users can enjoy views of wild prairie mixed with shaded patches through tree groves. The trail continues along busy E. Rollins Road and through residential neighborhoods, ending where Sunset Avenue meets Beachview Drive.

Note that there's no off-road connection between the northern and southern segments of the trail. To pick up the southern segment, head to Fairfield Park (part of the Round Lake Area Park District). Along this section of the trail, trail users will find prairie land mixed with small shaded sections and a more rugged pathway. The south end travels through Volo and Wauconda and ends in Mundelein. The southern end of the trail provides access to dog parks and areas for picnicking and fishing. Equestrians can also use the trail between Singing Hills Forest Preserve (where horse trailer parking is available) and Lakewood Forest Preserve.

Connections

At the southern end of the trail, trail users can connect to the Prairie Crossing Bike Path.
