In the east, a dead-end forces trail users to turn around, but trail users will want to linger at a scenic overlook of Mulberry Creek in the area's secluded woodlands. In the southwest, there are two disconnected segments that will one day connect to the longer Martinsville section to form an 11-mile trail in total.

Connections

At Pine Street in Martinsville, the Uptown Spur Trail branches off from the Dick & Willie Passage Rail Trail on a former railroad spur to head towards the city's charming downtown.

The Dick & Willie Passage Rail Trail runs for 6.9 miles on a former Danville & Western Railroad corridor, which was acquired by Southern Railway in 1920 and ultimately abandoned by its successor, Norfolk Southern, in 2009. The original railroad was affectionately known as the "Dick & Willie" after its initials.

About the Route

The paved trail passes through the heart of Martinsville, with short sections on both ends outside city limits in Henry County. Underpasses and restored trestles provide safe crossings of busy roads; there are only two at-grade crossings along the trail's entire length, and these are on low-traffic, rural roads.
