The Harry Reid Union Pacific Railroad Trail, informally called the Harry Reid UPPR trail or the UPPR Trail, is a rail-with-trail and runs alongside an active railroad, cutting through Henderson and connecting to residential neighborhoods and commercial shopping districts. The spur line sees infrequent traffic from companies receiving freight deliveries, and like the trail, is maintained by the City of Henderson. A fence separates trail users from the rail line throughout its length.

About the Route

The trail's northern endpoint is located at Green Valley Park, which has a playground, a baseball field, a basketball court, picnic tables, restrooms, and a large grassy field. Dogs are welcome and the frequent trees provide plenty of shade. From here, the trail heads southeast alongside the active rail line.

Midway along the trail, the popular Acacia Park offers ball fields, basketball courts, and picnic shelters, as well as a playground, splash pad, and dog park. The adjacent Acacia Demonstration Gardens provide examples of landscaping appropriate to Henderson's dry desert climate.

Further south, trail users will encounter the trail bridges over Interstate 11. The construction of Interstate 11 prompted the addition of separate rail and trail bridges over I-11 and parallel US 95 at the Union Pacific Railroad Trail's southeast end near Railroad Pass. Just past the bridge, the trail comes to its eastern end at the intersection with the River Mountains Loop Trail.

Connections

At the Arroyo Grande Sports Complex, the trail intersects with the Pittman Wash Trail.

Where the trail crosses I-215, the trail also intersects with the I-215 East Beltway Trail.

At the trail's eastern endpoint, trail users can continue along the River Mountains Loop Trail.
