The Fred Meijer Flat River Trail connects 2 mountain bike trails and 5 city parks in Greenville. The trail follows the winding Flat River, offering scenic views and incorporating forest and wetlands. Trail users can access parks, Community Center events, shopping, historical sites, the Flat River Museum, and schools. A unique feature of the trail is the tunnel under the busy M57 highway that features a mosaic mural depicting the local history.

About the Route

The Fred Meijer Flat River Trail runs in a nearly complete loop around the city of Greenville. At the southwest end, trail users can find the Baldwin Lake Public Beach and signage pointing north towards the trail route. As the trail heads north from the beach, it passes by several strip malls and Greenville High School athletic fields.

As the trail turns east, it meets the Flat River and passes Tower Riverside Park as well as past most of downtown Greenville. As the Flat River winds south, the trail continues with it and provides connections to Jackson's Landing Park and Alan G. Davis Park.

The southeasternmost portion of the trail turns west away from the river and heads to Tower Park, where there is parking available and is only a short on-road connection away from the trail's other endpoint at Baldwin Lake.

Connections

At Jackson's Landing Park, the Fred Meijer Flat River Trail connects to both the Fred Meijer Heartland Trail and Fred Meijer Flat River Valley Rail Trail.

Trail History

Like several other trails in Michigan, the Fred Meijer Flat River Trail is named after the grocery magnate and philanthropist who generously contributed financially to its development.
