The Salado Creek Greenway offers nearly 30 miles of paved trail along San Antonio's east side. Connecting at Eisenhower Park in the north of the city, the two trails form a route of more than 50+ miles.

About the Route

The Salado Creek Greenway is divided into two separate segments. The northernmost segment covers Eisenhower Park to John James Park. This first segment runs for almost 18 uninterrupted miles, and miles and offers some of the trail's most scenic sections. The northern endpoint is located in Eisenhower Park, where a connector trail forms a link to the Leon Creek Greenway on the city's west side. The pathway traces Salado Creek through bluffs and hardwood forests.

A highlight of the route is Voelcker farmstead, an archaeological site and historic set of buildings situated in Phil Hardberger Park. Named after a former San Antonio mayor, the park is an urban green oasis with native grasses and heritage oaks. The trail continues to another worthwhile attraction, Walker Ranch Historic Landmark Park, which offers beautiful natural landscapes, picnic areas, a large pavilion, restrooms, and a playground.

Continuing east and south, the trail skirts the edges of the city's airport property before continuing through a series of lovely neighborhood parks; along the way, you'll be treated to hilltop views of the city skyline and airport. The path traverses over a scenic wetland area with the Morningstar Boardwalk, named in memory of Army Staff Sergeant Christopher Morningstar, and continues through dense woodlands.

About two miles south of McAllister Park, a spur will take trail users to Lady Bird Johnson Park, a community favorite with a swimming pool, skate park, softball and soccer fields, and basketball courts. Farther south the trail runs through Los Patios, a shopping and dining area, before heading under Loop 410.

On the other side of the busy roadway, the pathway offers a well-shaded retreat under towering pecan and oak trees as it winds through Robert L.B. Tobin Park. The park is a terrific spot for bird watchers; trail users may see warblers, buntings, hawks, owls, and many other types of birds. It also offers unique faux bois art in its signage, picnic tables, and benches. The trail ends at John James Park, named for a surveyor who helped establish the city's boundaries in 1846. The park offers athletic fields, a playground, and restrooms.
