SMART Pathway

California

The SMART Pathway, which stands for Sonoma-Marin Area Rail Transit, roughly follows the light rail system for its planned 70-mile terminal in Larkspur and southern Marin County. Just a bit further north, a section also called the Lincoln Hill Pathway nestles between Lincoln Ave. and SMART commuter rail.

Between the Marin Civic Center and Novato Downtown stations, there are several wide gaps in the trail, although the pathway does provide direct access to those stations as well as the Novato Hamilton Station. Between Petaluma and Santa Rosa the trail is nearly complete, with just a small gap near Penngrrove.

Windsor and Healdsburg both offer short sections of trail that will in the future connect to the entire 70-mile route.

The SMART Pathway, which stands for Sonoma-Marin Area Rail Transit, roughly follows the light rail system for its planned 70-mile route. The in-progress route currently stands at 30 miles and offers first and last mile commuting solutions as well as opportunities for longer journeys. The SMART Pathway is also called the Great Redwood Trail.

Between Larkspur at the northern shore of San Francisco Bay all the way to Healdsburg, north of the Russian River.

About the Route

The southernmost section of trail is also called the Cal Park Hill Tunnel, because it offers a quick, smooth ride through the hill that separates San Rafael from the ferry
