St. Vrain Greenway

Colorado

Detour: Beginning March 2021, trail users will be directed to use a 1.1 mile on street detour between South Sunset Street and Price

Walton Park.

Shortly after reaching Ken Pratt Boulevard (State Route 119), its character changes, opening up to rural countryside. It's near this intersection that you can hop on the Left Hand Greenway and ultimately the Longmont-to-Boulder Regional Trail, which connects two cities and a vast trail network.

The trail's southeast end is at the Sandstone Ranch Park, which features a homestead built in the early 1880s by a Gold Rush pioneer. The 313-acre park offers a playground, picnic area, skatepark and ball fields.

There is a 1.2-mile separate section to the east in the St. Vrain State Park (3785 Weld County Rd #24.5, Longmont).

Detour: Beginning March 2021, trail users will be directed to use a 1.1 mile on street detour between South Sunset Street and Price Road. The detour is in place as part of a flood mitigation project and will remain until 2023. The route is clearly marked with signage to help users navigate around the work zone. For updates, please see the project website.

From its northwest end in Golden Ponds Park, the St. Vrain Greenway travels southeast along the creek for more than half its distance. At the park, watch for the bald eagles, wood ducks, great blue herons and Canada geese that call the area home. The trail skirts commercial and residential areas through the heart of Longmont, offering spectacular mountain scenery along the way and lake views by the Boulder County Fairgrounds and Izaak
