Fred Meijer Berry Junction Trail

Michigan

Overview The 11.1-mile Fred Meijer Berry Junction Trail is situated between two natural treasures: Lake Michigan to the west and the

Here, the Shivering Timbers roller coaster, one of many rides at Michigan's Adventure, the largest amusement park in the state, towers over the trail, so you might hear the rumble of the high-speed cars on its wooden tracks and the screaming of thrill-seekers for a short while. The rest of the trail continues south through this forested landscape until reaching the more urban landscape of North Muskegon.

Connections

At the northern end of the Fred Meijer Berry Junction Trail connects to the White Lake Pathway, which in turn connects to the Hart-Montague Trail.

At the southern end of the trail, trail users can connect to the Muskegon Lakeshore Trail.

Overview

The 11.1-mile Fred Meijer Berry Junction Trail is situated between two natural treasures: Lake Michigan to the west and the Manistee National Forest to the east. The pathway, built on an inactive section of the Chicago and West Michigan Railroad, provides an important connection between the communities of Muskegon, Fruitland, Dalton, and Whitehall.

About the Route

While most of the trail takes trail users through peaceful forests and occasional meadows, midway along the trail, just north of Riley-Thompson Road, the sights and sounds will become quite different than the rest of the trail.
