Kokomo's nickname is the "City of Firsts" and the Industrial Heritage Trail celebrates its progressive and inventive past with public art and signage highlighting the historic significance of some of the nearby factory buildings. It was here that the first successful test-run of the "horseless carriage" (the internal combustion engine) took place and where stainless steel flatware and the first mechanical corn picker, among other inventions, began.

This urban trail runs adjacent to an inactive rail line, stretching from County Rd. 300n south to US 31/S. Reed Road. At the northern terminus of the trail, the Industrial Heritage Trail connects to the Nickel Plate Trail, which continues for another 37 miles north from Kokomo towards Rochester.
