The Lombard Street Path stretches nearly 2 miles through an industrial area of northern Portland. At the southern end of Kelley Point Park, the path makes two important connections: It meets the Columbia Slough Trail, which will one day parallel the full length of the 19-mile stream, and Marine Drive Trail, a 17-mile trek along the south shore of the Columbia River. Both trails are part of the 40-Mile Loop that will someday encircle Portland and extend to other parts of Multnomah County.

Kelley Point Park, at the trail's north end, features vistas of the Willamette and Columbia Rivers and offers places to swim, boat and fish in the water.
