Black River Feeder Canal Trail

New York

This trail follows the Black River Canal Towpath that links Boonville to Foresport. Running from Erwin Park at Boonville to entry, travelers can visit the Boonville Black River Canal Museum which preserves, houses, and displays artifacts from the canal era. Kayaking and swimming are also popular activities along the route and it serves as an educational field trip destination.

The canal is part of a much larger trail network called the North Country National Scenic Trail.

This trail follows the Black River Canal Towpath that links Boonville to Foresport. Running from Erwin Park at Boonville to Alder Pond at Forestport, it is a quiet walk or bike trip through woods and fields along the old towpath.

The 77-mile canal was built between 1837 and 1855, connecting to the water of the Erie Canal. This provided the region with access to eastern and Midwestern markets and was essential to the region's economic growth. This canal held and still holds the world record for 109 locks.

The Black River Feeder Canal Trail now connects to the Black River Environmental Improvement Area (BREIA) Trail System, Boonville Youth Athletic Association, and Headwaters Shopping Plaza. Across from the Erwin Park
