The Military Cutoff Trail is a paved, north-south route paralleling its namesake roadway on the east end of Wilmington. A wide grassy median separates the trail from the busy roadway. The south end of the trail has an urban feel and offers access to many restaurants, shops, and other businesses, while its northern end is more residential.

On the trail's southern end, it connects to a segment of the Gary Shell Cross-City Trail, a developing pathway that connects to the University of North Carolina and many of the city's premier parks.
