The trail ends at Peters Canyon Regional Park, where trail users can continue on one of the local favorite's many hiking trails. (Cyclists will need to park their bikes.) The park is a popular spot to view wildlife, and its 340 acres provide a full day's worth of sightseeing.

Farther north, a disconnected section of trail runs along Jamboree Road from Canyon View Avenue to E. Santiago Canyon Road in Orange, directly across from Santiago Canyon College. In the near future, a paved trail will be developed linking the two segments, formally completing both the Peters Canyon Bikeway and Peters Canyon Regional Trail.

To the trail user, the West Irvine Trail and Peters Canyon Bikeway are one continuous trail with two names in three cities. The northern component of the Peters Canyon Regional Trail, both paths feature a blacktop lane for cyclists and a decomposed granite track for joggers and equestrians. Together, they join Irvine's Peters Canyon Trail to popular Peters Canyon Regional Park on the Tustin–Orange border.

The Peters Canyon Bikeway begins across Jamboree Road from Irvine's Valencia Park. Pass under the road to pick up the West Irvine Trail, which provides access to much of the city's extensive trail network at Bryan Avenue. Continue north on the Peters Canyon Bikeway instead to parallel local roads through Tustin, passing scenic Citrus Ranch Park and Cedar Grove Park along the way.
