Razorback Greenway runs for over 40 miles of Northwest Arkansas, connecting numerous natural and cultural attractions in Bentonville, Fayetteville, and the growing suburban centers of Rogers, Springdale, and Lowell.

About the Route

The Razorback Greenway's northern endpoint is just north of Sugar Creek Soccer Park, on Mercy Way in Bella Vista. Bella Vista Lake Park, nearby, with parking available, also offers a good place to start. Heading south from Bella Vista Lake Park, the trail runs alongside McKisic Creek and then passes the Crystal Bridges Museum of American Art, offering access to its surrounding trails, forest, and outdoor sculptures, before continuing south through downtown Bentonville and alongside exurban farmlands in Lowell.

South of Bentonville, the trail skirts Lake Springdale and follows Spring Creek. This section of the route also passes the Shiloh Museum of Ozark History and through the town of Springdale, before reaching Lake Fayetteville Park and its several recreational offerings, including the Botanical Garden of the Ozarks.

Just after the Northwest Arkansas Mall, the trail weaves into downtown Fayetteville, adjacent to the University of Arkansas, near Old Main, before passing through Walker and Greathouse Parks in south Fayetteville.

The Razorback Greenway's southern endpoint is at Kessler Mountain Regional Park, on the park's eastern edge, home to a sports field complex and offering access to several sprawling acres of forested mountain trails.

Connections

The Razorback Greenway is a distinct trail network made up of dozens of individual trails, some with their own individual TrailLink pages.
